PETER BOSSHARD

Peter Bosshard is the Policy Director of International Rivers, an international NGO working to protect rivers and the rights of people who depend on them. For 30 years, the Berkeley-based organization has worked to stop some of the world's most destructive dam projects around the world to protect the natural environment and people's human rights, and to strengthen decision-making processes and standards in the water sector at the national and international level. Mr. Bosshard also supervises International River's Climate, Africa and China programs.
